Computer News You Can Use

Dear friends of the Center,

This is the inaugural issue of “Computer News You Can Use.” Over the past several years we have worked with several hundred congregations in the Indianapolis-area on computer and technology related issues. Time and again we’ve been asked to provide ongoing information about technology and things we hear about or discover. So, here we go!

This “e-news” will come to you as we hear of new technologies, issues, events, or general information we think might be of interest. Most of the information we get is from you—so don’t hesitate to send me a note about something you’ve discovered or heard about that we might include in this e-news.

And of course, if you don’t wish to receive this there is the usual legal-ease at the bottom to instruct you on how to remove yourself from the list. Enough introduction, here’s some information I think you all need to know about. Happy computing!

The Indianapolis Neighborhood Resource Center (INRC) through their Indianapolis Neighborhood Cyber Center offers all-day classes on Microsoft Office products for $25 per class. You read correctly, $25. Here’s their information: You can empower yourself with technology! The Indianapolis Neighborhood Cyber Center, located at INRC, provides state-of-the-art computer training to improve the technical capabilities of neighborhood associations, community-based organizations, not-for-profit agencies, small businesses, faith-based organizations, and the citizens of Central Indiana.

Cost is $25 per course, payable at registration, by check to INRC or by credit card. You may register by phone at (317) 920-0330 with credit card. Scholarships are available to neighborhood associations that are registered members of INRC and to citizens who would benefit from training but are unable to pay. Call (317) 920-0330 for a scholarship application. Please register early to ensure a seat. Sorry, but we cannot refund any cancellations made later than two business days before the workshop.
